Dear Hiring Manager,

In my career pursuit, I have never given myself a limit to what is possible. But I am no blind dreamer. I set myself up for opportunity, and I work hard to make sure my dreams are not just dreams. I practice my batting formation everyday so I am prepared for the inevitable curveballs that are thrown at me. This personal philosophy is what makes me confident I would be a valuable asset to your company as a digital marketing professional.

Starting my internship experience at Union Pacific, I knew I had plenty to learn and even more to prove. I was very early into my advertising-centered education, but I had a willingness to learn and perform. As such, I quickly found ways to stretch the bounds of my internship to include new responsibilities and experiences, advancing my skills in digital marketing, copywriting and front-end coding. Working with upper-level employees, I shadowed the Employee Engagement Survey, which is distributed annually to the Fortune 150 company's 30,000+ employees. I worked on interpersonal and technical aspects of the survey, which contributed to the survey's record-breaking 88% participation.

In addition to my internship in Omaha, I have been experiencing the intricacies of agency life at Jacht Agency, where I serve as Director of Multimedia. Overseeing the entire multimedia department, I manage client teams to ensure all deliverables are on time and of professional quality. This experience includes working with high-profile clients like the Nebraska Department of Transportation and the Nebraska Army National Guard to execute professional-grade multimedia deliverables.

Considering my experience and ongoing development of digital marketing skills, I am confident in my ability to exceed expectations at your company.

If you would like to learn more about my work experience, my resume will show more positions I have held and how they have contributed to my current skillset. I look forward to a potential conversation with you, and my contact information can be found above. Thank you for your interest, and I await your response with excitement.

Sincerely,

Noah Hass
